

Call for Panel/Paper Proposals

Southern Conference on Slavic Studies

Annual Meeting: February 27-March 1, 2025

Lexington, KY

DEADLINE FOR SUBMISSION OF PROPOSALS: Monday December 2, 2024

We strongly encourage complete panel or roundtable proposals, but proposals for individual papers will also be accepted. In order to maximize the number of whole panel submissions and to make it easier on participants to form panels when they only have a single paper topic, this year your submissions will automatically populate a spreadsheet that will show other panels, roundtables and individual papers. There you can take a look at the work of other participants to try to find scholars with whom you can form a panel. This will help avert the danger that your paper would have to be placed on a non-cohesive panel by the organizers. A panel typically consists of a chair, three members and a discussant while a roundtable has a chair and three to five participants.

The portal for submissions is here: <https://forms.gle/21oWFU6TV3opfcSW9>

The 2025 meeting, hosted by the University of Kentucky, will take place at the Hilton Downtown Lexington Hotel (group rate $139.00 per night). Further information about speakers and events will be forthcoming soon. The local arrangements committee is hard at work planning a sightseeing tour to a bourbon distillery on Saturday afternoon, March 1. And sharpen your pencils and your wits for the Lexington 2025 version of the traditional "Beach Party," A Slavic Studies Trivia Contest on the evening of March 1st! Who will be crowned the winner?

The SCSS is the largest of the regional Slavic and Eurasian Studies associations in the United States, and it attracts national and international participation. The purpose of the SCSS is to promote scholarship, education, and in all other ways to advance scholarly interest in Russian, Soviet and East European studies. Membership in the SCSS is open to all persons interested in furthering these goals. Papers from all humanities and social sciences disciplines, on any topic and time period, are welcome. We encourage participation from scholars of all Slavic, East European, and Eurasian regions.
